

Integrated Project Management

CONTRIBUTED BY THOMAS JENKINS

Viking provides an experienced project management team at the core of its business for the sole purpose of delivering higher production, improving efficiencies and reducing operational costs. The IPM group operates across all product lines, acting as the key focal point for any customer seeking technical support and a diverse range of integrated well solutions.

The successful execution of a project, such as well construction, well intervention or well optimization, is always determined by an effective, centralized planning process and the availability of services that are strategically aligned with customers' objectives.

By offering integrated project management, Viking has the ability to draw on a wide range of in-house services while providing an end-to-end management function, ensuring dedicated project assessments and well engineering, through to drilling, completion and production services.

Viking strongly believes in providing integrated services to perform seamless operations with added value to its customers

The primary objectives of the IPM group is to streamline the overall project from the original enquiry and planning stage, through to execution and completion, without the customer having to deal with a dozen different operations and service companies.

Under this process, the "Viking to Client" interface becomes simplified, while dramatically improving the efficiencies of the project and allowing each of the operational departments to focus solely on its wellsite responsibilities.